Since the last year, we have been challenged to comprehend the invisible and acknowledge the importance of air. Being in an enclosed space became a complex activity and air, perceived as a threat. The Air Pavilion explores the multitudinous potentials of air not only as a vital element but also as a structural system that can house social spaces. Whereas the rectangular-shaped inflatable structure provides different activities such as socially distanced gatherings, lectures, and workspace, the adjacent bounce houses offer an opportunity to comprehend the crucial need for mind and body -as an intertwined system- to loosen up and distress. The organic chairs are also composed of an inflatable structure which are covered by a fabric, therefore transmitting comfort and a playful design. Finally, the Air Pavillion is an invitation to experience and interrogate air as an assemblage of social agencies.
